

I urge the Federal Communications Commission to delay the scheduled June 2nd vote and oppose relaxing the current Media Ownership Policy rules.

The airwaves are open to the public and should not be controlled by a few very rich and powerful media moguls who are only interested in their own gain.

It seems to me that instead of serving the public interest, the changes would serve the interests of a few corporate fiefdoms that want to control more of what we see and hear. I strongly feel what is at stake is nothing less than the health of the democracy. We need more voices and viewpoints, not less.

The FCC needs to go back to the drawing board to craft rules that genuinely protect the public interest as expressed by public input, not by media moguls, that will stand up in court.
